

Consulting, Volunteer, and Research Opportunities for Graduate Students

Who We Are

Founded in 2005, Omprakash is a free web-based platform that connects a diverse network of over 160 grassroots social projects in over 30 countries with a global audience of volunteers, classrooms, and communities that can learn from and support their work. Through direct dialogue with project leaders, individuals that register in our network can find robust opportunities to volunteer, intern, or conduct research at a range of health, education, and environmental projects. As they do so, we work to enrich their experiences and amplify their impacts by helping them connect with other actors in our network and share a wealth of relevant stories, media, and resources via our free online repository.

What We Offer

- Expansive network of health, education, and environmental projects built upon long-term relationships with volunteers
- Diverse opportunities for 'online' volunteering (e.g. business consulting over Skype)—without leaving home, you can put your skills and knowledge to use with a real client working for social good
- Further opportunities volunteering, interning, or researching abroad (e.g. conducting intervention research at a health clinic or interning as a legal advisor or accountant)
- Volunteer Grant funding available for students that can demonstrate financial need and serious commitment to our network

Get Involved: Three Easy Steps!

- Visit www.omprakash.org and register in our network—registration is free and easy, and can be completed in just two clicks if you register through Facebook
- Browse our volunteer opportunities (www.omprakash.org/volunteer-opportunities) and filter by 'volunteer from home' if appropriate
- Find an opportunity that inspires you, contact the project leader through our site, and begin dialogue to find out how you can help
